She was close to death. The doctors initial patient survey is grim. The infant is very near death. He tells Donna, "Put her into one of the small bassinets and let her go." But Donna is not about to let a little baby lie all alone waiting to die. She holds her for a few minutes and knows it is up to the Lord to keep her alive because the trauma could take her two-day-old life any moment.

She had never been in a swimming pool before. So, holding her in my arms, I got her feet wet. She started to shiver and was frightened. Her lip began to quiver, and she was about to cry. Holding onto Ana, I told her, "Don't be afraid. Daddy will hold you tight." In that swimming pool in Kariba, I voiced what my heart had felt for a long time. I told that innocent struggling life that I was her daddy. I knew that I loved her the very first time I held her tiny body in one of my hands. How could any human being not love and cherish such a beautiful little child.
