The weakness he fears could be his lover's only hope.

Mother Earth, Book 2

Bear has never regretted leaving his old life behind for his exotically beautiful lover, Dragon. Following his heart, though, has left them in need of a home. There's only one place he can think of where they can be together and be happy. Shenandoah. A place of myth—until he encounters signs that it's a real place that lies somewhere to the north.

Dragon doesn't share his lover's faith that it even exists, much less that it will live up to Bear's high expectations. Yet they are Brothers now, bound by love and so much more. No hardship will keep Dragon from Bear's side. Even if it means nothing but disappointment waits at the end of their journey.

Danger lurks in the wilderness, the ruined cities of the lost Old World, and especially within themselves. As Bear's quest for a new home becomes a spirit journey of mystical power, Dragon doubts his own strength—an unbearable shame he tries to hide deep within. But when a chance encounter turns into a fight for survival, Bear's life depends on Dragon's ability to put his doubts aside...and dare to hope.

Warning: This book contains knife fights, cannibals, mysterious ruins, and dirty sex between warrior men.
