When We Get Married Katherine Cachitorie

Kira Crance never intended to fall in love with that Italian stallion Bobby Venetti, not a cool black sister like her who had every intention of marrying a cool black brother and together they would produce a carload of cool black babies. But that was exactly what she did: she fell hard for Bobby V. Yet ten years later, after nothing but turmoil and drama and no wedding ring, Kira's decision to stay with Bobby crashes in on her when another woman appears on the horizon. This new wrinkle dazes Kira so that, while walking through an intersection, she's nearly killed by an oncoming vehicle. But when she discovers that the driver is not only drop dead gorgeous but kind and caring, she finds herself mesmerized. But she keeps her distance: she absolutely refuses to fall in love with yet another white man. The elusive Jake Moncrief is also mesmerized when he meets (and nearly kills) Kira Crance. Yet when he finds out that the other man Kira is so smitten with has not only mistreated her emotionally but in other, more sadistic ways that are nothing short of criminal, he doesn't hesitate to step in. Will Kira allow his intervention or will she continue to insist that she has far too much invested in Bobby Venetti to ever consider starting over with another man? Or will she dump Bobby V but still refuse Jake's love simply because he, like Bobby, is white? Love awaits Kira Crance, but will she grab the touchdown pass and make it to the end zone, or will she fumble the ball?
